

DFD partners with Oris to support local & gift sustainability

In an effort to support small producers and local products in Panama, DFD teamed up with Oris and Chef Andrés Morataya to create a sustainable action that directly benefits local community

Duty Free Dynamics partnered with the prestigious watch brand, Oris, and Chef Andrés Morataya, in an effort to support local producers in Panama. In line with Oris' philosophy "things that make sense," the team is gifting closest friends a box filled with the talented chef's favorite regional products.

Small producers and local products are essential for any society; in addition to their direct contributions to the local economy, the community-based workers provide diversity. As a result of understanding the importance of tradition and culture, they are able to create meaningful products.

Crafting a direct link between the individual and the community they represent, Oris and Chef Andrés Morataya created a sustainable and exquisite action that directly benefits local society. Moved by the firm belief that collective small actions make a difference, they want to inspire others to also gift sustainability through their actions this year.